SMILES OVER GOVERNORSHIP

Sill Studying Fourth District Vote to Discover How Lane Was Beaten.

Delegate Kalanianole will leave for Washington in about three weeks, although he may not be present at the opening of congress.

The Prince is still in the doubtful about the vote of the fourth district for Lane. The morning after election he said some hard things about the tales of that district, and particularly of certain precincts, having thrown Lane down. When asked yesterday if he had gone over the figures to see whether he was justified in his statements, Delegate Kellie said he couldn't see how the figures could be construed differently, yet he was not quite certain as he was on that date. From what the Prince says on this matter, he spoke on that morning before a complete analysis of the votes had been made, and was of the belief then that it was Lane's votes which had thrown down the majority candidate of the Republican party. Yesterday the Prince was not so positive about the matter, but still inclined to believe the legislature had something to do with the election or dropping of certain candidates.

He referred to the case of Tavae and himself in Tavae's district, where

PLANNING TO HELP HILD IN ITS GROWING

Hild got widely excited yesterday, according to a wire he received by The Advertiser, to the effect that the board of trade of that growing center had not yet passed a resolution directing the retention of any buildings on the Hild federal building site. The only reason why there is no endorsement on this resolution is that there are no going to be any buildings retained on the land in question, the department of public works having already issued a call for bids for the work of clearing them.

On the site recently acquired for the federal building are three buildings at present, the board of health quarters, the post office and the offices of Hild & Smith. The latter have asked the permission to stay just where they are for safety or safety sake, but have been told they must go just as soon as the first half of the board of health building leaves.

Marion Campbell, superintendent of public works, is just now trying again to get the voters to decide upon help for helping Hild grow. He has already named a newly planned street after the most successful man in the territory, Kamehameha, to be cut through the residential site blocks, leaving the territorial side from the materials. He has made a proposition to the County of Hawaii to build the road and be paid by the territory for the work. The roads of Kamehameha street run through both the territorial buildings where they sit, and the street work will start immediately after the buildings are removed. The next half is to go in the center of Kamehameha street and the extension of the old Shima street to Kamehameha street. In the month of January, or a few days earlier, goes to the singer Kihau and Simeon.

"Forget It," Says Davis. Judge George A. Davis, who has been much in the news of late, has been credited to the Democratic and Socialist regarding their split up. On November 11, he addressed the members of the meeting of the two parties, and John C. Lane, the Democratic candidate for mayor, was present. Davis' speech was well received, and he asked the voters who cast their ballots for him and all those who worked for his interests, "Is it still too early to get the fall returns from him, where a fat was early made?" He added, "When I visited the民主黨, he was received with every demonstration of loyalty."

"Forget It," says Davis. The speaker had more votes than himself. That makes him the line to be followed. He has already named a newly planned street after the most successful man in the territory, Kamehameha, to be cut through the residential site blocks, leaving the territorial side from the materials. "The Republicans won the election by trickery, money and coercion," announced Link McCandless, who has emerged from the temporary obscurity into which he was thrust by the voters on Tuesday. He further announces that the Democrats may contest the election on the grounds of fraud.

McCandless charges the Republicans with having resorted to every form of trickery and deceit to gain the election, but he is satisfied with the results, however, for he says he had 600 more votes this election than last.

"Home Rule votes gave the Republicans the victory," asserts McCandless. "There were 2,000 Home Rule votes and of these I received 900. I got the total Democratic vote, and I know all those who stood by me and voted for me."

"Am I going to run again? Oh, well, that's pretty hard to answer just now. Why in two years I may be dead," and with this Delphic reply McCandless sauntered his usual Bryan-like smile and let it go at that.

"Am I going to Washington? Well, I can't say just now, but maybe I will. Yes, I may have some measures to bring to the congress, but they will be

Stories of Coercion.

"We have heard all kinds of stories about the use of votes to the Republicans. There were simple rounds of the ballot boxes. I saw one myself cast his vote in the eighth of the tenth and twelve casts representing a ballot box in each of the ten in the twentieth of the area. In the twentieth of the area there were four simple rounds of the ballot boxes, when the voter was done with his ballot box, he would go to the next ballot box and so on.

If plans do not go astray, Honolulu will have another breathing place out at Waikiki, or rather, the present beautiful Ainahan park, which has been donated to the Territory by the late Governor Cleghorn, will be enlarged and extended until it faces on Kalakaua Avenue all the way from Kalakaua avenue to Liliuokalani avenue.

Some two weeks before he died, Governor Cleghorn wrote John F. Colburn to the effect that he was considering the matter of purchasing that portion of the Kapiolani Estate that adjoined Ainahan. This area, which amounts to about six acres, would have made Ainahan more of a square block, and in many ways have enhanced the beauty of the place. Unfortunately, Governor Cleghorn died before matters had gone very far.

It is now proposed to add the whole eighteen acres of the Kapiolani Estate to Ainahan, and to make it the show place of the city. The legislature will be addressed on the subject early next year and it is thought that the project will go through.

May Resume Whole Beach.

The probability that the federal government will resume all the foreshores from the Seaside Hotel to Ainahan, and to make it the show place of the city. The legislature will be addressed on the subject early next year and it is thought that the project will go through.

May Cut Up and Sell.

In the event of the territorial government not taking the whole block and adding it to the Ainahan park, it is possible that the Kapiolani Estate trustees will do the late owner's desire and add the six acres to the Ainahan. The balance of the block, with the exception of three acres, which will be reserved for Prince Kuhio's home, will then be cut up into lots and sold. Then the government will be in a position to take some property for a park, the Prince will give up his reserved portion of three acres.

The trust that will either be turned into a road or not set up and sold is known as the Kapiolani and comprised the estate and residence of the late King Kalakaua and Queen Kapiolani.

Residential Suburb.

If the subdivision and sale of the land takes place next year, the lots will range from one hundred feet wide to a proposed six hundred feet wide, and will be bounded on the north by the ocean and on the south by the Ainahan street.
